Introduction to the Founder

Founder Mr. Wong Kam Fu

Mr. Wong Kam Fu, a native of Qingxi, Dongguan, Guangdong, is the founder of Hong Kong Star Paging Communications Limited, China Patent Agency (Hong Kong) Limited, CAL Intellectual Property Alliance (Holdings) Limited, CAL Intellectual Property Association Limited, and the Chairman of the Hong Kong Academy of Maozedong's Poems. He previously served as an advisory professor at Peking University, chairman of the board of directors of the Intellectual Property School at Peking University, honorary dean of the Intellectual Property

School at Shanghai University, and a director of the China Intellectual Property Research Association.

Wong Kam Fu played an important role in the development of China's intellectual property field. In the 1980s, he funded the application for patents abroad for many important domestic inventions. He also donated money to establish the Intellectual Property School at Peking University, donated RMB 2 million to support the establishment of the China Intellectual Property Training Center by the China Patent Office, and later donated money to establish the Intellectual Property School at Shanghai University. He made great contributions to promoting China's intellectual property cause.

In the early 1980s, Wong Kam Fu realized that China had many outstanding scientific researchers, but due to the lack of a patent law, they could not share the fruits of their technological innovations through patents like scientists in Europe and America. Therefore, he began to dedicate himself to giving speeches and lobbying throughout China, promoting a deeper understanding of intellectual property rights among people from all walks of life, and advocating for the establishment of a patent law to protect the results of innovative technologies. He even created a slogan to promote patents: "For intellectuals to become ten thousand yuan households, they must engage in invention and innovation, and apply for patents to achieve prosperity."

Through the concerted efforts of insightful individuals from all sectors of society, China finally began preparing to establish the Chinese Patent Office and draft a patent law a few years later. Yet, having a patent law alone was far from sufficient. The process of turning an invention from an idea into a formal application, and ultimately obtaining a patent after examination, required the involvement of professional patent agency services to assist inventors in transitioning from innovative ideas to authorized patents. To this end, Wong Kam Fu submitted a written proposal to relevant Chinese national institutions, recommending the establishment of a patent agency in Hong Kong. In 1982, Wong Kam Fu signed an agreement in Hong Kong with Ren Jianxin, Director of the Legal Affairs Department of the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade, to jointly establish a patent agency with international professional standards in Hong Kong, named China Patent Agent (H.K.)

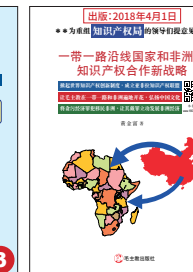

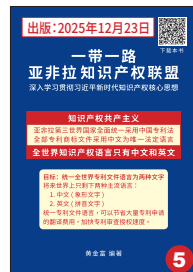

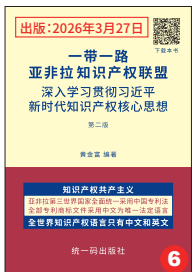

Limited. At the time, such a project involving national investment required approval from the central government. Ultimately, after review by State Council leaders and Deng Xiaoping personally, the unprecedented patent agency was approved as a pilot project in Hong Kong.

On 27 March 1984, China Patent Agent (H.K.) Limited was established in Hong Kong, with Liu Gushu (father of Lenovo's Liu Chuanzhi), former Deputy Director of the Legal Affairs Department of the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade, serving as Chairman, and Wong Kam Fu as Vice Chairman. This was China's first foreign related patent agency approved by the State Council and was included in China's first "Implementing Regulations of the Patent Law". After forty years of development, China Patent Agent (H.K.) Limited now has offices in Hong Kong, Beijing, Shenzhen, Shanghai, New York, Tokyo, and Munich, employing approximately 550 staff. It is one of the largest intellectual property firms in China and has been repeatedly recognized as a top intellectual property agency. Over the past four decades, the company has provided high quality agency and legal services to numerous domestic and international clients, cultivated a large number of elite professionals in the industry, and has been hailed by leaders of the National Intellectual Property Administration as the "vanguard" and "national team" of the agency sector.

Wong Kam Fu has been involved in the telecommunications and network fields for over 30 years. In the early 1970s, he independently designed a paging information system and founded Star Paging Limited in 1978. Later, in 1991, it became Hong Kong's first listed paging company (Hong Kong stock code: 383). At the time, the innovative concept of "Star Paging, 8 second response, digital display, instantly clear" deeply resonated with the public, earning him the title of Hong Kong's "King of Paging".

In the 1990s, Wong Kam Fu invested in domestic communication networks, pioneering the introduction of pagers to cities like Shanghai and Beijing, where he launched "Star Paging" services that quickly gained popularity among mainland customers. He also secured contracts for the wireless spectrum of five out of the seven major military regions in China at the time to develop mobile telephone networks, including the CDMA network in Beijing, and planned to raise US$1 billion through a U.S. listing. However, due to a shift in Chinese government policy, just one week before all approval procedures for the U.S. listing were completed, Premier Zhu Rongji declared the Chinese Foreign structure illegal, causing the IPO plan to fall through and ending in failure. A year later, Chairman Jiang Zemin announced that "The Chinese military will no longer engage in business activities". As a result, his domestic telecommunications network company, which had signed a contract with the military region, was forced to cease operations and its assets were transferred to China Unicom without compensation. The company eventually went bankrupt. Among the Hong Kong investors in mainland China at the time, Wong Kam Fu was considered a small businessman, but he was the boldest and had the most faith in the country. However, due to his failure to account for political risks, he ultimately lost US$200 million in investments and even lost his listed company. He was a big loser in investing in the domestic telecommunications industry.

To advance the realization of "Intellectual Property Communism," Wong Kam Fu took the lead in registering "CAL Intellectual Property Alliance (Holdings) Limited" and "CAL Intellectual Property Association Limited" in Hong Kong in August 2024. In addition, he has published several related books, which can be downloaded for free by scanning the QR code below.
